WIVES COMPLAIN THAT THEIR HUSBANDS ARE CRUEL

In the district court, Mrs. Chlois Leap and Mrs. Ida Utman are seeking divorces from their husbands, George Leap and T. L. Utman, on the grounds of cruelty and desertion.

Mrs. Leap avers in her petition that she married the defendant January 4, 1908, and that for some time past Mr. Leap has been cruel toward her, using bad language and in striking her in the face with his fists. She also states that on January 15, 1909, he deserted the home and has since remained away from her. She asks for general relief and costs of suit.

Mrs. Utman was married to the defendant December 6, 1906, since which time her husband, she alleges, has been cruel. She says that he has called her bad names and has assaulted her and threatened to kill her. She asks for general relief, costs of suit and attorney fees.

In the case of the First National Bank of Ogden against the American Construction company and William Glasmann, the latter has given notice that he has paid $2589.65 which is more than his due proportion of the judgment and he demands a repayment. Mr. Glasmann was a party to the suit as surety for the defendant company on a certain obligation.

This is to certify that I have been a great sufferer from Rheumatism since 1894. Contracted the disease while working with a snow plow on the railroad. For several years I have been obliged to use crutches a great part of the time. Having used three boxes of the Meritol Rheumatism Powders, I have thrown away the crutches and am now almost fully recovered. It certainly has done wonders for me and I heartily recommend it.

PARIS REVIEW OF PAST SIX WEEKS

stood up against repeated frantic assaults. Every one of them was repulsed. On October 30, the British troops had been obliged to withdraw for several hundred yards before a powerful onslaught of the enemy. Our troops, attacking in conjunction and at the same time with our allies, were successful in re-establishing the impassable barrier which closed the approaches to Ypres. That which was done here by our army corps, working in close harmony with the English corps, is worthy of a place in the finest records of military history.

Enemy Succeeds November 12.

On the 12th of November the enemy had succeeded, at a point north of Ypres, in crossing the canal. By the 13th he had been driven back. Also on the 12th the enemy succeeded in occupying a certain territory to the rear to the south of Ypres, but this territory was recaptured from him. On the 15th the attacks of the enemy were less intense and our position became impregnable.

This result was obtained by the Belgian army under the orders of General D'Urban, together with the participation of the armies of Generals DeMaudhui and DeCastenau.

These three armies constitute the group of armies under the command of General Foch. The two last mentioned contributed brilliantly to the victory by repulsing all the attacks directed against them and by occupying, between the Oise and Lys, several positions of importance.

The decisive assistance that we were able to lend, under these circumstances, to the British troops, tightened further the bonds uniting the allies. Finally the energy of our resistance inspired the Belgian army with confidence. This army, which had reorganized on its territory, is now ready for the engagement of tomorrow.

The losses of the Germans have been considerable. They undoubtedly exceed 120,000 men. In certain trenches 120 metres long there have been found more than 2,000 corpses. This in spite of the fact that we know that the Germans, whenever it is possible for them to do so, remove their dead from the field of battle.

It was all an indication of the importance of our success. The greatness of the result obtained by us becomes particularly significant and striking, if one will realize that the Germans themselves always regarded the breaking of our line at Ypres as most important. In checking their offensive movement, we inflicted upon them a most humiliating defeat.

We furthermore have obtained results, the importance of which should be set forth. They are:

"The Belgian army, having been driven from its own land, Emperor William was not only on the point of realizing his project to proclaim at Ypres the annexation of this courageous nation, but he was also on the point of glorying in the annihilation of at least one of his adversaries. This double satisfaction was refused him. If Dunkirk, Calais and Boulogne had been taken, Great Britain would have been hampered in communicating with her army on the continent. Finally, France, in maintaining impassable the front of her armies from the sea to Allied Front Outlined.

"About the 20th of October our front was outlined as follows:

"From Nieupoort to Dixmude, one of our divisions of infantry and our marines held the railroad line, while the Belgian army was reorganizing itself in the rear, to the south of Dixmude was the canal of the Scheldt, and from here our line extended to the east, making in front of Ypres a vast semi-circle held by four corps of the French army and one corps of the English army. The line then dropped to a point to the south of Messines and Armentieres, forming two segments, the first held by the remainder of the British army, and the second by ourselves.

"The German attack was an effort first to occupy Dunkirk and reach Calais or Boulogne. They tried to flank us, and to cut the direct communications of the British with the sea coast. All the heavy artillery of the enemy brought from Antwerp was there, ready to be used again.

German Attacks Repulsed.

"Beginning the fifth of November, the attacks were repulsed. From the railroad we marched toward the Yser, rolling up the enemy who had succeeded in crossing to the left bank of this stream, and drowning his rear guards in the floods. One can still see near Ramscappelle German cannon half buried in the mud and the corpses of German soldiers half submerged.

"Then the enemy, finding it impossible to get around our flank, endeavored to cut through. This was the battle of Ypres, an engagement desperate, furious, relentless and unsuccessful.

"For close on to three weeks we
